The need for him is undeniable. I can't help but to beg him to smile at me. I need it like blank canvases need paint. Like this page needs words.

Impossibly. Undeniably.

That's why I avoid him. I can't be brave every time he's nearby. So, when he comes to me, I need him so much, I push him away. I've never needed something this much. Like air. Like warmth. Fire and desire.

Passion. Desperation.

He's just like every one else has been. Never a word more than Hello. And yet.... The need to see him is undeniably the strongest thing I've felt since I died.
